In this list the following definitions will apply

Date added	The date in this field is the date the marketing name was added to the Australian Fish Names List. The term “public consultation” means that the name has been conditionally approved by the Fish Names Committee and is currently undergoing a public consultation phase. The lack of an entry in the date added field indicates that the name was in existence when the list was initially created on 1 January 2001.
Scientific Name	The internationally recognised binomial name by which the particular species is known. Each binomial name, or binomen, consists of a genus name and a species name. These two names are distinguished from other text by the use of italic typeface. The genus name always begins with a capital letter; the species name is always spelt with all lower case letters. There is one scientific name per species.
Marketing Name	The name by which the species can be marketed in Australia. There can be only one valid marketing name in Australia per species. This may be different to the marketing name used in other countries. In Australia, the Fish Names Committee approves marketing names for fish. Unique marketing names cover one species whereas group marketing names (see below) cover a group of closely related species.
Common Name	The other names by which the species is known in Australia. A species can be known by a wide range of common names depending on its location. Common names can be a sub-group of a group marketing name.
Brand Name	The registered name used for a product by a company or business.
Group Marketing Name	Group marketing names cover two or more species. They can be used as the default marketing name for a number of similar species, possibly each having a unique marketing name.

	In the Fish Names List, there is also a second use of the term 'group'. For ease of use, species are linked together by a group common name, which is independent of the marketing name. For example, blue-eye trevalla, white warehou and rudderfish all belong to a group called 'trevallas' but 'trevalla' itself is not a marketing name.
CAAB Code	CAAB stands for 'Codes for Australian Aquatic Biota'. CAAB codes consist of eight digits and each species is assigned a unique CAAB number. This number is unique to Australia. For more information on CAAB, see http://www.marine.csiro.au/caab .
